17. ABSTRACT (MAX. 250 WORDS)

Forty organizations connected with the El Paso United Fund are listed with descriptions of the services rendered by each, the name of the person in charge and the phone number. Twelve agencies supported by the Texas United Fund are also listed with the notation that they operate on a statewide or national level, and except for USO, require no local staff. Introductory remarks note that by consolidating many local drives into one, more and better agency services are made available at a lower cost and with less inconvenience to contributors.

The ultimate aim of the Fund is to combine all health, welfare, and character-building services into one federated fund. Donors are able to contribute intelligently through one annual gift. The community should benefit from the efficiency possible only through central budgeting and planning. The directory is given to each staff member working with Project Head Start and the Oral English Program in El Paso, Texas.

The United Fund of El Paso County is a locally autonomous, non-profit corporation, formed in 1957 by contributors as the best way of planning for and providing necessary health, welfare and character-building services in our community. By greatly reducing the number of separate drives and conducting a single consolidated fund-raising campaign each year, the United Fund enables more and better agency services to be available to people at lower costs, with a minimum of inconvenience to contributors.

Governed by its givers, including top civic leaders and representatives of business, labor, and industry; the United Fund now supports forty agencies in El Paso County. Of course, some organizations are not members of the United Fund, but an open-door policy is maintained with the ultimate aim of combining all health, welfare, and character-building services in federated fund-raising according to the admissions criteria of the United Fund.

The United Fund offers advantages to the contributor, volunteer worker, and the community as a whole. The giver is able to contribute intelligently and easily to a comprehensive program of services through one annual gift, which is then carefully administered by groups of local citizens who review each agency's needs and then report to the giver how his money is spent.

The volunteer, the backbone of the United Fund, is allowed to devote a specific time each year to one fund-raising drive rather than being called on each month of the year, thus reducing confusion that results from separate drives with contradictory selling points. The community benefits from the efficiency possible only through central budgeting of contributed funds and central planning for non-duplicated agency services.
